Martin Luther King, Jr. had an extraordinary dream of peace and equality. To me peace means that people accept their, and others differences. Differences are what bring us together. Whether it's skin color, voice, the way your brain works or just who you are on the inside, you have differences and you need to accept them. We are brought closer every day because we are not afraid to let our differences shine through. And each time we accept these differences we are creating peace amongst each other.
